CHASING RAINBOWS.

An old legend taught that under the end of every rainbow could be found a put of gold, and many foolish youths spent weary days seeking in vain for the hidden treasure. In these enlightened times we haugh at the felly of past ages, yet many people still believe in promises of wealth which have no better foundation than the ancient fairy tale. Senators Stewart and Peffer, ex-Congressmen Bryan and Bland Is we their excludors followers, who are convinced that under the end of the free coinage and flat money minbows they will find untold riches. Stories of w inderful prosperity for everybody if only more silver money is coined are list aed to gravely by men who in the ordinary affairs of life are shrewd and s .sible.

But attractive as they doubtles are, these promises of wealth to be had through a mere change to a cheaper standard of values are withing but financial fairy stories. They are based on the belief that governments can create wealth by legislation and that people will be richer if they measurable possessions in cheaper money. Now as ever there are men who dreat of wealth to be had without working for it and of schemes for business per perity which are wholly outside the actual world. Sooner or later all the must learn the lesson that nature yields wealth to inher only and that an abn dance of cheap money does not mean a rich country. Already the people w were for a time misled by the agents of the silver mine owners are abandon: their delusions, and have resolved to leave the world of dreams and famseverely alone in the future. Chasing rainbows may be sport for idle boys but it is very poor business for intelligent men.
